Attention motivated, high-achieving leaders! Are you a victim of your own success, getting results that you know aren't sustainable? Feeling stressed, burned out, overwhelmed or simply "stuck," maybe even for a while? Or you've been meaning to do something big and haven't gotten it done, yet....

Are you tired of having the same conversations and getting the same results? Do you feel as if you are on a hamster wheel and want off? You know that doing more of the same won't yield a different result.

Susan Freeman will speak to us about a unique system she Charity. Charitable acts. Sponsorship. However you act on it, giving is an attitude. It originates in the heart and not in the head. We don't give to get back. That is a lesson taught in the home. It manifests itself in our ways of thinking and doing. It works its way into our daily activities and is something we plan to do, execute, and reflect on after. It is sometimes random. It always feels good.

I know you feel the same way. We all have our reasons and ways that we give. Little things and large things, random acts of kindness, opportunities to give, present themselves with grand invitation or subtle notice. We give of ourselves in so many ways. We give to strangers. We give to those we love. We are kind in our interactions and supportive to those around us.

Sometimes we give together, leveraging our strength. NEW is a grand example of that truth in action. By sharing our knowledge, we learn about important causes that deserve our time, attention, and contributions.

Did you nominate a special cause or charity organization for the attention of NEW members? Did you give your time to evaluate the focus of those organizations, and the benefit they would gain from your endorsement? I enjoyed serving as Vice President of Outreach in past years, and this year Ginny Daniel has presented a roster of very deserving potential recipients for our Holiday Outreach support. They include: Alpha House of Tampa; Buddy Baseball; CASA – St. Petersburg; Children's Cancer Center; Kimberly Home; and Pace Center for Girls. We should be proud to support any of these.

We are sometimes reminded that December is the season of giving. It is, and that means different things to different people. Once again, "giving" can be so many different things. We give of ourselves every day, not just during one season. Giving may be a special gift tied with a bow, but giving is also a sandwich out the car window to a stranger. It is volunteering to make phone calls and send e-mails to gain the support of friends and associates. It is a kind word when needed.

I went looking for a quote to insert about giving, and I found so many that I could not choose just one! Mother Theresa, Mark Twain, Abraham Lincoln, Mahatma Gandhi, and many others have expounded on the subject. It seems giving is universal. I suggest you search the Internet and enjoy what each has said about the spirit of giving.

While on the subject of the Internet, I want to pass on a tool you may put to use while evaluating your charitable pursuits. It is www.charitynavigator.org, which utilizes a host of measurable data on each organization to rate the charity. Ratings are part of the website, and while data can't tell the whole story, it gives some insight and direction, as there are so many good causes to choose among.

I suggest we embrace our desire to give to others, exalt in the exercise that is volunteering, and reflect on how we improve our lives by improving the lives of others.

developed to help leaders break through barriers to achieve extraordinary professional and personal results. Her work begins where traditional leadership training leaves off. She'll share:

- Where leadership really lives (it's not where you think!)
- The secret of how to inspire others confidently
- The most powerful (and often left out) step for achieving a goal
- How to diminish and extinguish chronic, overwhelming stress, and
- How to "Sustain The Gain!" to positively impact your work and life

Discover the keys to being an effortless, Natural Leader—decisive, brimming with confidence, and able to create powerful, sustainable results in your business and personal life.

Susan S. Freeman, founder and president of Step Up Leader and author of StepUp Now: 21 Powerful Principles for People Who Influence Others, helps motivated, high-achieving leaders and influencers get to the root of what is holding them back and access their Natural Leader within.

A frequent speaker at leadership and professional meetings, Susan has appeared on national television and radio on the topic of transformational leadership and influence. An accredited coach with the International Coach Federation, Susan's background includes an M.B.A. from Columbia University, 25 years of strategic marketing, non-profit, and retained executive search management experience. Her training is extensive in numerous Eastern wisdom practices, including Amrit Yoga. This unique blend of practical and integrative techniques helps her clients rediscover and evolve their leadership in a balanced, sustainable way to experience passion, clarity and exceptional results.
