Warren Buffett readily admits that Berkshire Hathaway (now America's fourth largest company) would not have existed without the influence and guidance of his late first wife, Susan. She helped shape his charitable and political beliefs, and steered him away from his childhood's and his father's deeply held governmental philosophies. His long-time editor (who also is his bridge partner) and his closest advisors are female. Several women entrepreneurs and professional managers have sold their businesses to him. His conglomerate has three women directors, and the board of his family foundation has a female majority. And his largest public investments of $11 billion has

President's Message

It's easy to say our network is made up of relationships between the members. It's simple, almost cliché in fact. In my first month as president, I've been challenged to adapt to the outside pressures affecting individual members, which require them to re-order their priorities. I support those decisions wholeheartedly.

Yet, it reminds me that we are all individuals. We all have different reasons for coming to NEW that first time. We all have different reasons for choosing to apply for membership, for participating in our own way, and for remaining members for years and years. I am humbled just thinking about the many, many relationships that have begun as part of this network.

It's a process that we go through, from being acquaintances, to clients and customers, to trusted friends. Our perceptions of each other are uniquely our own and evolve with time. One member may remind you of a far-away friend. Another may remind you of a sister, or in some cases, a favorite aunt. That is not to say that all members are going to connect with all other members. We have a tremendous wealth of experiences among and between our members. We are all different and that, in and of itself, is part of developing relationships. After all, as Shirley MacLaine said, "The most profound relationship we'll ever have is with ourselves."

It's these relationships that enrich our experiences in being members of something larger than ourselves. The power of working together, of sharing our strengths, and of supporting common goals is fulfilling and motivating at once. It drives us to keep doing, even when our plates seem impossibly full. It drives us to know that we are not alone in our struggles of work and home. With each small success, there is motivation to remain focused and engaged. Have you felt the energy we create as a group?

Sometimes the intangibles of our group energy make it very difficult when I'm trying to explain to a potential new member why she should take the time to come to a meeting. It is probably funny to watch me, using partial sentences and dramatic arm gestures, trying to get my point across. We'll see if my guest-count improves—I've been working on my delivery of the personal invite. How well are you doing, bringing guests and new members into the NEW fold?

I'm pretty sure it's six years since I joined NEW, and it is part of this month's observations because I feel a little bit closer to members who have trusted me with a glimpse into their lives, just because we know each other a bit more. Perhaps retreat has me thinking that way as well.

Membership is still about relationships, after all.

a woman as president and CEO. Warren is optimistic about the future of the USA economy, primarily because of the impact women will make as their full potential is unleashed.

Robert Miles is an internationally known keynote presenter, author, and authority on both Warren Buffett and Berkshire Hathaway. Author of three top-selling books about the "Oracle of Omaha," Miles is regularly tapped by the media to comment on nearly every move Buffett makes. He has appeared on numerous radio and television broadcasts on five continents, including NPR, CNN, CNN International, CNBC, and FOX Business.

Miles founded and hosts the "Value Investor Conference" held each stockholders' meeting. In 2011, the University of Nebraska invited Miles to create and teach a graduate executive MBA course titled "The Genius of Warren Buffett: The Science of Investing and the Art of Managing," based on his worldwide lectures. For the final exam, students in this unique annual course present Buffett with recommendations of businesses they think would best fit into the Berkshire family of businesses.

This is a rare opportunity for NEW members, visitors, and guests to glean insights from an engaging speaker, as Miles usually commands substantial fees for access to his informative presentations and corny wit. Mark you calendars and spread the word now to RSVP for the October 8 luncheon.

2013 Holiday Outreach Program

We took nominations from the board and members for charities they would like to support through our 2013 Outreach Program. We determined six organizations that are most fitting for our intended purpose (women, families and education). Now through the end of October, we need help from our membership to determine which two charities are most deserving of our support. Please vote on one of the charities or submit a write-in candidate. Please email Ginny Daniel (virginia.daniel@morganstanley.com) with your vote. We will have ballots available at the October luncheon. Organizations will be recognized at the December luncheon and we will have opportunities for you to support the two worthy causes throughout the holiday season.
